This booklet is a publication of the Legal Services Society (LSS), a non-government organization that provides legal aid to British Columbians with low incomes. LSS is funded primarily by the provincial government, and also receives grants from the Law Foundation and the Notary Foundation.

See the back cover for how to order.

How to Appeal Your Conviction is also available in PDF on the LSS website at www.legalaid.bc.ca.

This publication may not be commercially reproduced, but copying for other purposes, with credit, is encouraged.

This publication explains the law in general. It is not intended to give you legal advice on your particular problem. Because each person's case is different, you may need to get legal help. This publication was up to date as of January 2009.

Introduction

This booklet explains how to appeal a conviction for a summary offence or for an indictable offence. It tells you how to prepare a conviction appeal on your own. Another booklet, How to Appeal Your Sentence, may also help if you're appealing your sentence as well as your conviction.

Before you go ahead with your appeal, it's a good idea to find out whether you can get legal aid through the Legal Services Society (LSS).

If you are in custody, you can call the Appeals Section collect at (604) 601-6085. You can also write to:

Appeals Section

Legal Services Society
400 – 510 Burrard Street
Vancouver, BC V6C 3A8
Fax: (604) 682-0956

If you are not in custody, go to the legal aid office nearest you. It's a good idea to call before you go. Look for the number in the white pages of your phone book under "Legal Aid — Legal Services Society" or in the yellow pages under "Lawyers — Legal Aid — Legal Services Society." You can also call the LSS Call Centre at (604) 408-2172 (in Greater Vancouver) or 1-866-577-2525 (no charge, in the rest of BC), or go to the LSS website at www.legalaid.bc.ca.

If you've been refused legal aid and want to find a private lawyer to take your case, try the Lawyer Referral Service. It will give you the name of a lawyer who you can call for a half-hour appointment for $25 plus taxes. If you decide you want to hire him or her, remember to ask them how much you can expect to pay. Contact the service at:

Greater Vancouver: (604) 687-3221
Elsewhere in BC: 1-800-663-1919
(call no charge)

Reasons for appealing your conviction

The purpose of a conviction appeal is not to retry your case. You can't ask the court to hear your evidence again to determine whether you should have been found guilty. An appeal court can only set aside your conviction for one of the following three reasons:

- the verdict was unreasonable or couldn't be supported by the evidence;
- the judge made an error of law; or
- there was a miscarriage of justice on any grounds (basis).

Unreasonable verdict

You may appeal your conviction if the verdict was unreasonable, given the evidence presented. Challenging a conviction on the grounds of unreasonable verdict focuses only on the weakness of the evidence. You must persuade the appeal court that the evidence was too weak for reasonable jurors to find you guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

For example, if the only evidence linking an accused person to a bank robbery came from an eyewitness who wasn't certain she identified the correct person, the appeal court would probably consider changing the conviction.

However, it's very difficult to succeed on these grounds for appeal. The appeal court is rarely interested in arguments about the credibility of witnesses or the importance given to various pieces of evidence at the trial. For example, you may think the judge was wrong to believe the Crown's witnesses instead of you or your witnesses. But that kind of appeal rarely succeeds.

Error of law

You may appeal your conviction because errors of law were made at the trial. If you establish that errors of law were indeed made, your conviction may be set aside. Wrongful admission of evidence, a wrong interpretation of a Charter right, or a misdirection (giving the wrong instructions) to the jury on a crucial question of law are all examples of errors of law.

However, if the court thinks that even without the error the verdict would still have been the same, it won't allow the appeal. Section 686(1)(b)(iii) of the Criminal Code of Canada permits the court to dismiss an appeal when the verdict couldn't possibly have been different.

Miscarriage of justice

You may appeal your conviction because of a miscarriage of justice. If there are errors of both fact and law that the appeal court considers to be a miscarriage of justice, your conviction will be set aside. Examples of a miscarriage of justice include a jury member being biased or a judge refusing to provide an interpreter for an accused person who doesn't understand English very well.

What to do once you have decided to appeal

If you've been refused legal aid and decide to appeal on your own, follow these steps.

Gather the forms you'll need

The forms you need are at the back of this booklet. Before you fill in the blanks and tear out the forms, it's a good idea to photocopy them in case you make a mistake and need extra copies. You can also get originals of these forms from a Court of Appeal for BC registry (for indictable offences) or from a Supreme Court of BC registry (for summary offences).

File documents and serve documents on the Crown

You file forms by sending them to the appropriate court registry. (To find the court registry you need, see "Where to file your Notice of Appeal" on page 3.)

You need to file the completed original forms along with the required number of photocopies at the registry.

When you file your documents, staff at the registry will stamp each copy. They'll keep the original plus some of the copies and return the rest of them to you.

- One copy is for you to keep to use at your appeal.
- The other copy is for you to give to ("serve on") Crown counsel. Sometimes the registry will do this for you. Be sure to ask if it will.

For more information about how to file your documents or how to serve documents on the Crown, call or write to the appropriate court registry. (Contact information is on page 3 and 4.)

File a Notice of Appeal

To let the court know you want to appeal, you must first file a Notice of Appeal. Which kind of Notice of Appeal form you need to fill out depends on whether your conviction is for an indictable offence or a summary offence. (In general, an indictable offence is more serious and carries a heavier sentence than for a summary offence.)

If you are not sure whether you were convicted of an indictable offence or a summary offence, check with the lawyer who represented you in court, or with the registry at the courthouse where the trial was held.

For an indictable offence

Your appeal for an indictable offence is to the Court of Appeal for BC. You file the form called Notice of Appeal or Application for Leave to Appeal (see page 11).

The same form is used for a sentence appeal. If you're appealing both your conviction and sentence, you need to fill out only one form.

You must file the original plus five photocopies.

For a summary offence

Your appeal for a summary conviction is to the Supreme Court of BC. You file the Notice of Appeal — Defence Appeals Against Conviction, Sentence or Other Order form (see page 13).

You must file the original plus five photocopies.

When to file

You must file your Notice of Appeal within 30 days of the date that your sentence was imposed. If you want to file a Notice of Appeal after the 30-day limit, you must ask the court to extend the time allowed for you to file your notice. (See "Filing a late Notice of Appeal" on page 4.)

If you wish to apply for release on bail until your conviction appeal, see "How to apply for release on bail pending appeal" on page 6.

Note:

When you refer to the judge on your forms, a Provincial Court judge is "The Honourable Judge _____," and a Supreme Court of BC judge is "The Honourable Mr./Madam Justice _____."

Write your grounds of appeal

On the Notice of Appeal form, write your grounds of appeal in the space provided. State your particular complaint about the conviction that relates to any or all of the three categories of unreasonable verdict, error of law, or miscarriage of justice.

If you have difficulty wording your grounds of appeal, include the following ground, which allows you to add more grounds later:

"Such further grounds as I may advise and this Honourable Court may permit."

Where to file your Notice of Appeal

For an indictable offence

If you've been convicted of an indictable offence, file your Notice of Appeal in the Court of Appeal registry in Victoria, Kamloops, or Vancouver, depending on where you were convicted. If you were convicted on Vancouver Island, file in the Victoria registry. If you were convicted in the interior of British Columbia, file in the Kamloops registry. If you were convicted anywhere else in the province, file in the Vancouver registry.

For a summary offence

If you were convicted of a summary offence, file your Notice of Appeal with the appropriate Supreme Court registry.

In British Columbia, Supreme Court registries are located in the following cities: Campbell River, Chilliwack, Courtenay, Cranbrook, Dawson Creek, Duncan, Fort Nelson (filing registry only), Fort St. John, Golden, Kamloops, Kelowna, Nanaimo, Nelson, New Westminster, Penticton, Port Alberni, Port Hardy (filing registry only), Powell River, Prince George, Prince Rupert, Quesnel, Rossland, Salmon Arm, Smithers, Terrace, Vancouver, Vernon, Victoria, and Williams Lake.

You'll find the address and phone number of the nearest Supreme Court of BC registry in the blue pages of your telephone book under "Court Services" in the "Government - Provincial" section, or at www.courts.gov.bc.ca.

If you're not sure where to file your Notice of Appeal, write or telephone the registry of the Provincial Court where you were convicted and ask which Supreme Court of BC registry you should use.

Filing a late Notice of Appeal

Maybe you didn't know you had a right to appeal and only learned of that right after the appeal period. Or maybe you planned to appeal but the Legal Services Society caused a delay (see more about this on page 5). In this case, file your Notice of Appeal together with a Notice of Application for Extension of Time to Appeal.

On the application for extension of time to appeal, indicate that you had a genuine intention to appeal within the 30-day period, if you did, and give the reasons why you were unable to file the Notice of Appeal in that time period.

For the Court of Appeal

The Notice of Application for Extension of Time to Appeal is on page 15. The form called Notice of Appeal or Application for Leave to Appeal is on page 11. Fill out both forms.

You must file the forms with the registry at the Court of Appeal.

- For the Notice of Appeal, file the original plus five photocopies.
- For the Notice of Application for Extension of Time to Appeal, file the original plus three photocopies.

For the Supreme Court

The Notice of Application for Extension of Time to Appeal is on page 15. The Notice of Appeal — Defence Appeals Against Conviction, Sentence or Other Order is on page 13. Fill out both forms.

You must file the forms with the registry at the Supreme Court of BC.

- For the Notice of Appeal, file the original plus five photocopies.
- For the Notice of Application for Extension of Time to Appeal, file the original plus three photocopies.

If the Legal Services Society caused the delay

Maybe you had difficulty getting a response from the Legal Services Society within the appeal period. If the Legal Services Society caused a delay in your application for appeal, you can request an affidavit from the society that explains the delay. An affidavit is a written statement that someone swears on oath to be true. To obtain this affidavit, contact the Appeals Section of the society at the address on page 1.

File the original of the affidavit plus three photocopies along with your Notice of Application for Extension of Time to Appeal, and your Notice of Appeal.

How to prepare for your appeal

Get transcripts of your trial and file them

When you go to an appeal hearing, the court must have the court transcripts of the trial proceedings. Transcripts are the typed records of everything that was said at trial. They contain the basic information you must use for your argument on appeal.

In the Court of Appeal

If you're appealing a conviction in the Court of Appeal, you must order and pay for the original plus five copies of the transcripts of the trial proceedings. Ask how to order transcripts at the registry of the court where you were convicted. You need to file the transcripts with the Court of Appeal registry within 60 days of filing your Notice of Appeal.

In the Supreme Court

If you're appealing a conviction in the Supreme Court of BC, you must order and pay for the original plus three copies of the transcripts of the trial proceedings. Contact the Provincial Court where you were convicted and ask where you can get the transcripts.

You need to give the Supreme Court of BC registry proof that you have ordered the transcripts within 14 days of filing your Notice of Appeal. This proof can be a copy of the transcription company's receipt of your order.

You need to file the transcripts with the court registry within 45 days of filing your Notice of Appeal.

Prepare your arguments and documents

It's a good idea to prepare and file a written outline of your argument. This is called a "factum" or a "statement of argument." The guidelines for preparing a factum are on pages 17 to 23 of this booklet. At the hearing itself, you base your arguments on the outline that you've presented in your factum. Your factum helps you to clearly explain your argument to the court.

Note that witnesses aren't called in appeal cases except in rare instances. Usually, the appeal hearing can deal only with the evidence already given at the trial, which is contained in the court transcript. You can't refer to new evidence without permission ("leave") of the court. See "Using new evidence" on page 6.

In the Court of Appeal

File your factum (statement of argument) with the court registry within 30 days of filing your transcripts. File the original plus five photocopies of the factum with the court registry.

In the Supreme Court

Prepare your factum (statement of argument) at least 30 days before the hearing of the appeal. File the original plus two photocopies of the factum with the court registry.

Do some research

Refer to any reported court decisions (“judgments”) that support your position. Try to use decisions of the Supreme Court of Canada, the BC Court of Appeal, or courts of appeal from other provinces.

You can find court decisions in books called law reports and case digests, which are available through the libraries of the law schools at the University of British Columbia and the University of Victoria, and through the various branches of the BC Courthouse Library Society. To find the nearest branch of the BC Courthouse Library, call (604) 660-2841 in Greater Vancouver or 1-800-665-2570 (no charge) in the rest of BC. You can also go to www.courthouselibrary.ca.

Useful resources available at the libraries include Martin’s Annual Criminal Code (which includes helpful explanations), the law reports Canadian Criminal Cases and Criminal Reports, as well as the summaries published in BC Decisions. Ask a librarian how best to find the information you need on the courthouse library’s computer.

You can also search the judgments of the Court of Appeal and Supreme Court of BC at www.courts.gov.bc.ca, a website of the BC government. Judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada are available at www.scc-csc.gc.ca (click the “Judgments” button at the side of the screen). As well, you can look up Canadian legislation and legal cases at www.canlii.org, the website of the Canadian Legal Information Institute.

Using new evidence

In exceptional circumstances, the appeal court will allow you to introduce, by affidavit, new evidence on matters that weren’t heard at trial. However, before the appeal court will hear that evidence, you must persuade the court that:

- the evidence could not have been called at trial,
- the evidence is relevant because it relates to an issue that was a deciding factor,
- the evidence is reliable, and
- the evidence could reasonably be expected to have affected the outcome (when taken with the other evidence presented at the trial).

It’s hard to satisfy all of these conditions, so applications to introduce new evidence are rarely successful.

How to apply for release on bail pending appeal

File notices

If you are in custody and wish to be released until your conviction appeal hearing, in addition to filing your Notice of Appeal you must file a Notice of Application for Release from Custody Pending Determination of Appeal in the appropriate registry.

The forms for each court are slightly different, so make sure you fill out the right one.

In the Court of Appeal

The Notice of Application for Release from Custody Pending Determination of Appeal for the Court of Appeal is on page 25.

File the original plus three photocopies of the following:

- the Notice of Application for Release from Custody Pending Determination of Appeal form;
- your written argument explaining why you should be released (see “Write your argument for release on bail” on this page); and
- your sworn affidavit (statement of facts). See “File your affidavit” on this page.

Include four copies of any information or materials that support your case, such as any legal cases you intend to rely on.

In the Court of Appeal, applications for bail pending appeal must be sent in writing, unless you get permission from the court to appear in person. Ask the registry how to do this.

In the Supreme Court

The Notice of Application for Release from Custody Pending Determination of Appeal or Stay of Probation Order or Driving Prohibition for the Supreme Court of BC is on page 27. Applications for bail pending appeal may be made in writing or in person.

You need to file the original plus two photocopies of the following:

- the Notice of Application for Release from Custody Pending Determination of Appeal or Stay of Probation Order or Driving Prohibition form;
- your written argument explaining why you should be released (see “Write your argument for release on bail” below); and
- your sworn affidavit (statement of facts). See “File your affidavit” below.

Include three photocopies of any information or materials that support your case, such as legal cases you intend to rely on.

Write your argument for release on bail

When you’re writing your argument for release on bail, it’s very important to be as persuasive as possible. There is no required form or format, but your written argument for release must persuade the court of the following:

- your appeal has enough merit (chance of succeeding) that keeping you in custody would cause unnecessary hardship;
- you’ll surrender yourself into custody on the date set for the hearing of your appeal; and
- keeping you in custody isn’t necessary in the public interest.

File your affidavit

You must also file an affidavit in the appropriate court registry to show the truth of the facts that you’re relying on to support your application. See page 29 for a sample affidavit form. You must sign the affidavit in front of a “commissioner for taking affidavits for BC,” who can be a lawyer or a notary public. If you’re in custody, a commissioner for taking affidavits will be available to you. If you’re out of custody, you can look for a notary in the yellow pages of the phone book under “Notaries Public.” To find a private lawyer, look in the yellow pages under “Lawyers.”

Your affidavit must include the following information:

- a statement listing all the places you’ve lived during at least the three-year period before the date that you were convicted;
- where you intend to live if you’re released;
- the name of your employer and the place of your employment before you were placed in custody;
- your employment prospects if released;
- the names and addresses of any relatives or friends who are willing to serve as “surety” (someone who will pledge money or assets to make sure you obey the conditions of your bail, if it’s granted);
- a statement of any criminal convictions received during the five years before the conviction you’re appealing. List the offences and sentences imposed. You may include anything to show that the offences aren’t as bad as they sound, as long as it’s true; and
- any special individual circumstances relating to your physical and/or mental health, or harm to you or your family if you aren’t released.

What happens at the appeal hearing

Address the court

You are the appellant, the person making the appeal. Usually you are the first to address the court and provide it with basic information. If you’re representing yourself, however, the court will often ask Crown counsel to provide an outline of the appeal.

In the Court of Appeal, three judges are present at your hearing. In the Supreme Court of BC, one judge is present.

At the beginning of the hearing, you’re asked to give the reasons why you think the appeal should be allowed. State the points clearly and politely. If the judge(s) ask questions about the facts, take your time answering and try to be as persuasive as you can. Getting angry will only lower your chances of success. At this time, do the following:

- state the grounds of appeal that you’re using to make your arguments,
- point out briefly the parts of the transcripts that support your arguments, and
- refer to any reported court decisions that support your position.

After your argument, the Crown lawyer will make his or her arguments. You then have the right to briefly reply to any arguments the Crown lawyer raises. The court will then decide whether to allow or dismiss the appeal.

Possible results of an appeal

The appeal court may allow your appeal or it may dismiss it. If the appeal court allows your appeal, it can do one of three things:

- acquit you,
- order a new trial, or
- substitute a conviction for a different offence.

In most cases where the appeal court allows an appeal, it will order a new trial. The appeal court will generally only acquit someone if the evidence is so weak that a new trial couldn't end in a conviction.

If you are already in custody and the court orders a new trial, you'll be kept in custody until your second trial, unless you can persuade the appeal court to grant you bail.

How to get a court-appointed lawyer (Section 684 application)

In some cases, you can get a court-appointed lawyer under section 684 of the Criminal Code. You can apply if:

- you have no money to hire a lawyer for your appeal, and
- you applied to the Legal Services Society for legal aid and were refused.

You can apply in the Supreme Court of BC or in the Court of Appeal, but only after you've filed your Notice of Appeal.

To get a court-appointed lawyer, you need to show the court that you can't afford a lawyer and can't effectively represent yourself.

You must tell the court about:

- your financial situation,
- your inability to get legal aid,
- your education and knowledge of the court process,
- the complexity of your case,
- your grounds of appeal (the main points you will argue),
- the reasons why you believe that you need a lawyer to organize and present your case, and
- how likely is it that your appeal will succeed.

Write a letter of authority

To show that you were refused legal aid, you need to authorize the Legal Services Society to send the court all the materials it has on your case:

- Fill out the Letter of Authority (Exhibit A) on page 31.
- Make two photocopies.
- Mail the original to the Legal Services Society at the address shown on the form. Note the date that you send the letter because you'll need this information for the Affidavit for Appointment of Counsel. See "What to file with the registry" on page 10.
- Attach one photocopy of the Letter of Authority to the original of the affidavit.
- Keep one photocopy for yourself.

What to file with the registry

You need to file the following two forms with the appropriate court registry:

- The Notice of Motion for Appointment of Counsel on page 33. For the court file number, use the registry number on your Notice of Appeal. File the original plus three photocopies with the registry.
- The Affidavit for Appointment of Counsel on page 35. The affidavit outlines the reasons why you think the court should appoint a lawyer for your appeal. Again, use the same registry number as on your Notice of Appeal. Fill out the affidavit by following the instructions on the left side of the page. File the original plus three photocopies with the registry. Remember to attach the photocopy of the Letter of Authority to the original.

You fill out the same Notice of Motion for Appointment of Counsel and Affidavit for Appointment of Counsel forms whether you're applying to the Court of Appeal or to the Supreme Court of BC.

You must sign the affidavit in front of a "commissioner for taking affidavits for BC," who can be a lawyer or a notary public. (See page 8 for how to find one.)

When the application is heard, you'll be brought in person before a Chambers judge of the Court of Appeal or a judge of the Supreme Court of BC.

Abandoning your appeal

If you've filed an appeal, but decide you don't want to go ahead with it, you have to file a Notice of Abandonment of Appeal (page 37).

Fill in the form and send it back to the court registry. Make sure another person witnesses your signature.

It is extremely difficult to re-open your appeal case once it has been abandoned.

NOTES

1. (a) If your appeal against conviction involves a question of law alone, you have a right of appeal.
(b) If your appeal against conviction is upon any other ground than a question of law, then you have no right of appeal unless leave to appeal is first granted. Your Notice of Appeal includes an application for leave to appeal where leave is necessary.
(c) You have no right to appeal against sentence unless leave to appeal is first granted by the Court of Appeal or a justice. Your Notice of Appeal includes an application for leave to appeal.
2. Further take notice that if you appeal from sentence the Court of Appeal may increase your sentence.
3. (a) If your appeal is against conviction or sentence alone, or against both conviction and sentence, this notice must be filed within 30 days of the date of imposition of the sentence.
(b) If this notice is filed beyond this time, then you must apply for an extension of time by completing Form 7 [Notice of Application for Extension of Time to Appeal].

GROUND OF APPEAL

These must be filled in before notice is sent to the Registrar. The appellant must here set out the grounds or reasons he alleges why his conviction should be quashed or his sentence reduced. If one of the grounds set out is "misdirection" by the judge, particulars of the alleged misdirection must be set out in this notice.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Briefly state the history of your case (the offence and sentence, as well as the name of the judge and the court dates) and the facts of your case. Number each of your paragraphs in order.

List the source(s) you're using to back up your statement of facts; for example, testimony or exhibits (evidence that was filed in the court) or the reasons the judge gave for your conviction. Also write down the page or line number where you can find these facts in the court transcripts or your appeal book (this is a collection of documents you make containing an index, a copy of the information or indictment, a copy of all exhibits, a list of exhibits and affidavits, a copy of the order under appeal, and a copy of the Notice of Appeal).

ARGUMENT

Outline your argument for appeal and include the specific laws or facts you will rely on. Include the page or line numbers where you can find this information in the court transcripts or your appeal book (this is a collection of documents you make containing an index, a copy of the information or indictment, a copy of all exhibits, a list of exhibits and affidavits, a copy of the order under appeal, and a copy of the Notice of Appeal). If you talk about a specific law or laws, you can either attach copies in an appendix, or put them inside a separate cover of the same colour as your factum, and file it at the same time.

In alphabetical order, list all the legal cases (“authorities”) you’ve referred to in the other parts of the factum. Next to each, write the page number(s) where they can be found in the factum. Also provide enough information so that someone could find the case (called a “citation”). For example: R. v. Oakes, [1986] 1 S.C.R. 103, 24 C.C.C. (3d) 321. If you use a decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, put the Supreme Court Reports’ citation first.
